

K2 Stone

A new BC quarry brings to the landscape a fresh look and a bit of curb appeal as well. From their Ocean Pearl quarry located on Vancouver Island, K2 Stone introduces innovative masonry stone applications produced in Duke Point of Nanaimo that are uniquely original. From a rare finding of metamorphic slate, dazzling applications are now available to satisfy architectural elements both indoors and out.

K2 produces Thinstone Veneers that weigh approximately thirteen pounds per square foot. Installation is simplified with the veneers applied directly to the substrate without additional engineering support required. “Each one of our eight basic profiles is available with cut corners for a seamless, full stone finish,” explains Tyson Hilhorst of K2 Stone. Providing fieldstone, ledge stone, and split-face stone, each style can be uniquely blended to provide a countless array of aesthetics with a full range of capping choices and custom cuts available.

A natural stone that will not fade or discolour, it can further be acid or pressure-washed without diminishing lasting integrity. “We sell directly from the quarry which brings the cost down considerably and is only slightly more expensive than manufactured stone,” Hilhorst adds. “It is now more affordable to a larger market that includes the renovation sector.”

As a member of Built Green Canada and Canada’s Green Building Council, K2 Stone ensures production supports earth-friendly practices that include a manufacturing process that uses recycled water as a coolant. Its light weight also minimizes transportation costs. “A full bed of full thickness stone that would fill a dual trailer truck would afford 1,550 square feet of coverage,” explains Hilhorst. “Our stone on the same transport would provide 7,000 square feet of coverage.”

The possibilities are limitless. With all eight profiles from the same quarry countless blends afford compatible design versatility for landscaping and in-home elements.
